Fire is known to be a great servant but a bad master. Accidents by fire are amongst the biggest threats to life and property.

However if they are detected early enough, fire incidents can be managed allowing the building occupants to safely evacuate the building and fire fighters to extinguish the fire.

Managing fire-related risks and accidents is a fine balance of various approaches and methods involving early detection of heat and smoke, suppression of fires, timely and intelligible communication, simultaneous or staggered evacuation of occupants.

Protection of both people and property during a fire can only be guaranteed if the building is equipped with an integrated fire detection & mass notification systems that includes fire detection and alarm systems, public address and voice alarm systems, fire suppression and fire prevention systems that all work together to fight the situation and safeguard assets. The requirement of such systems varies with the size, design, and application of buildings and their occupants. Therefore, every integrated life safety system requires a tailor-made solution suited to the building's application.

ZSK International has tied up with several leading brands to offer solutions that include the effective design of such systems.

Our trained, certified and experienced engineers are well versed with the various regulations and offer the right solution for all building and business verticals.
